

"Families will experience different types of stress within and without their households.

In major trauma, most families have resources that are brought together to help overcome the immediate problem.

But it's often life's daily stresses that add up, related or unrelated to a major event.